Our four-footed friends had things all their own way at the Madison Square Garden this morning, and a lively time they made of it. No one who got within a block of the big building could help seeing that some-thing very unusual was going on, for the deep baying of bloodhounds, the quick, sharp barking of pointers and setters, and the yelping of a hundred or more fox-terriers carries a good distance, even through thick brick walls. Within, the chorus of howls was perfectly deafening, and the excitement among the 1,400 aristocratic canines which are entered for the thirteenth annual bench show of the Westminister Kennel Club was something

ACTOR GILMORE'S LOSS.

A $100 Bill Came Out Unnoticed with Coins He Gave to a Beggar.

Mr. J. H Gilmore, who impersonates the gruff old Earl in the play of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," is $100 poorer because of an act of charity. He left his boarding-house in Fifty-eighth street yesterday to walk flown to the Broadway Theatre and procure small bills from the ticket office for a hundred-dollar bank note. He was just passing Fifty-first street, when He was just bassing Fifty-first street, when he was stopped by a beggar soliciting alms. He hastily rain his hand down in his trousers pocket, and drawing out a few small coins handed them to the mendicant, who walked off showering blessings on the actor's head. Mr. Gilmore's hand being gloved he failed to notice the contact with the bank note, which was in the same pocket, and in pulling out his hand the bill came with it and fell to the ground unnoticed. the ground unnoticed. The actor failed to discover his loss until he reached the theatre. Then he hurried back to the spot where he had met the beggar, but was unsuccessful in his search.

Much sympathy is felt for him by his coworkers, and a hope is expressed that the

FOURTH DAY AND NO JURORS.

Kerr's Trial Seems a Long Way Off, Though Talesmen Are Plenty. One hundred and twenty talesmen, with more or less unprejudiced and non-newspaper en-lightened minds, were in reserve for McKenzie Semple's examination for jurors in the Kerr trial this morning.

The court-room in which Judge Daniels is holding the extraordinary term of Oyer and Terminer was scarcely half filled, and most of those present were counsel and friends of the Broadway ex-Treasurer.

Ex-Judge Noah Davis and John H. Bird sat close to Kerr and consulted him frequently in whispers as to the prospective jurors.

Up to 1 o'clock twenty-six talesmen had been examined and rejected, and the jury box was still empty.
